i like tampa bay lightning and boston bruins in the east and detroit red wings and vancouver canucks in the west. i think detroit may go on a long winning streak right out of the gate this season. i'm looking for roberto luongo and the sedins to have another great year for the canucks. tampa bay is explosive and the bruins are still the champs.

I belive you are correct with bruins and lightning being strong again this year. I sure don't like what the flyers did getting rid of captain Richards and a lot of thier offense and goalie brian boucher is playing with carolina hurricanes this season. I think philly will drop a bit. Montreal looks like they might not have enough offense so far this pre season, puts a lot of pressure on goalie carey price to play well early on. watch out for the hawks in the west to bounce back. looking forward to attending a few games this season!

leafs! leafs! leafs! the toronto maple leafs are making the playoffs this year for sure, brian burke's plan is coming together and goaltender james reimer is solid between the pipes. make sure you pick some toronto maple leaf wins if you want to be the hockey pool champ!

flies were not able to get anti niemi from sharks at the trade deadline. guess we'll need to keep scoring lots of goals to make up for brygalov. does this pool include playoffs?

does this pool include playoffs? well not for the leafs or canadiens. for for the vancouver canucks it sure does. everybody in canada should get on board now because the cup is coming to vancouver! and burnaby where I live!

yeah the canucks lookin good as usual this time of year but they slipped up against coyotes last night despite trying some new lineups. speaking up shaking things up look for sidney crosby and the pens to rock the rangers tonight! talk about a big game...

crosby is great. we like the rock on power 97 and a few of us in the band office are in the hockey pool. the oilers are out but there's still hope for the flames. don't lose faith in your team.
